“ Ray,

I will not be able to attend either the visitation or the funeral today. My Supreme Commander is at a long overdue and much needed doctor's appointment and I am awaiting the verdict from the tech who is working on our HVAC that conked out last evening.

I cannot begin to fathom how difficult these last few months have been for you. And I'm certain today is probably one of the most difficult days of your life. But life is what it's all about, pal. Donna's is over, but yours is still to be lived. Grieve and mourn her, but you need to live the rest of the gift we all have been given. I've been going through a rough patch the last year and a half and the thing that I have focused on is the recognition that life is a very precious thing. I try to appreciate every minute of it and be thankful for the fact that I'm here to experience the things around me.

When you can, give that some thought and move on with the blessing we've both been given. Try to appreciate the beauty around us and push all the negative crap aside, because in the final analysis, that stuff doesn't really matter.

I just wanted you to know that I have been thinking about you and I wish you the very best moving forward.

*My best regards,

“ For me at least, Mrs. Smith will be remembered as a stern and loving mother figure.

I was one of the many troubled kids that met her through TKD. On Wednesday nights we would practice a bunch of boring forms (JK, do your forms kids!), but all we really wanted to do was spar. However, if we missed Wednesday's forms class, she would make us workout (hard) rather than spar on Friday night. As a young man, this as well as many other lessons, seemed overly strict and tough - why couldn't I just do the 'fun stuff'? She was the very definition of a rule boss.

What I know now, is that she knew me better than I did myself. She knew I was struggling at home and refused to give up on me. She checked in on me regularly asking how things were at home, how are you doing in school? Often times, she was the only one asking. Both she and Mr. Smith were always there for me. I owe them more than I could ever repay. I am the father, husband and man that I am today because of the love they showed me. Even though we aren't blood related, the Smiths are my family. I mourn the passing of Mrs. Smith like I would my mother.

I love you Mrs Donna Smith, and will miss you dearly. I promise to do my best to live up to your example and to pass your lessons on to my children.

My thoughts and prayers go out to each and every one of you. Especially you, Mr. Smith -I love you, sir.

*Love,
